The Thomas Merton Center seeks interns to support our work organizing for peace, human rights, and economic, environmental, and racial justice. Since 1972, we have served as a resource center for grassroots activists in Pittsburgh. We're a member-funded organization working for radical change. Learn more about our work at thomasmertoncenter.org.

We try to offer each intern a meaningful experience by matching their skills and personal goals with valuable work in our organization. Past interns have worked on issue campaigns, event planning, membership development, communications outreach, and publishing our monthly social justice newspaper.

- Seeking interns from all majors, including the arts, sciences, and humanities, in both undergraduate and graduate programs, as well as people not currently enrolled in school
- Time commitment of 6 to 20 hours per week, with flexible scheduling and possibility of doing some work from home
- Some evening and weekend availability preferred, but not required

Internships are unpaid.
